On the summit of a small but locally high drumlin with excellent views particularly across to Clough Castle to the S.E, and Dundrum Castle to the S. The site is set in pasture fields bounded by dry-stone walls hedged by quickthorn and whin. The enclosure survives as a ploughed out platform projecting N.W, over falling ground at the junction of four fields. The ground falls away steeply from the perimeter of the platform and viewed from the W, its profile is a distinctive feature in the landscape. The width of the arc of the platform measured along a S.W.-N.E, field boundary that traverses the site is 41.0 m, and the depth is about 26.0 m, which gives a calculated diameter to the enclosure of about 42.0 m. The interior of the platform is slightly barrel shaped. There are vestiges of the perimeter of the platform in the field to the S.E, but none are apparent in the S.W, field. The field to the E, is some 2.0 m, below the site and the scarped boundary has been revetted in modern times.
